THE PROCESS OF BREATHING.

Respiration to rather an important operation for all sentions beings. But how few persons under stand, even partially, the comprehensive meaning of the term applied to the inhabition and exhaletion of atmospheric sir, and the multiform purposes which the subtle agent has to perform in suetaining vitality in the human system. A writer in Black wood's Magazine has undertaken to solve them problems in past, and we areil purselves of the seables of his scientific researches.

Respiration is defined, in the outset, as that function of the lungs or gills by means of which the blood absorbs oxygen, and parts with carbonic acid and some other nozious elements. The lungs chial tubes and air sace. Between the air vessels run the capillary blood reasels. These are so no remains to be determined by future discoveries, trations of the infallible truths of the science of merous, that the diameter of the meahes formed by their network is less than the three-thousandth of an lach, and the number of air cells is calculated at not less than six hundred millions.

In breathing, the air is drawn in by the nostrile and passes hoto the bronchial tubes, and from thence into the air chambers. Here it yields part of its oxygen, and receives carbenic acid in exchange. It has been found by experiment that while twenty fire cubic inches of air is the quantity expelled in ordinary quiet breathing, the amount will rise to pinety, and even two hundred and forty cubic inches by very suergetic efforts. It is therefore colculated that an adult man, with a welldeveloped cheet, will retain about one hundred and seventy oubic inches of air in his longs, after each expiration, during ordinary breathing; and se twenty are cable inches will be added at the next inspiration, there will be alternately one hundred and seventy five and two hundred cubic inches of air acting on the blood which rushes over the vast area of the lunge. The phrase "vast area" is no exaggeration ; for, small as the bulk of those dygans truly is, the amount of serface on which blood is exposed to the air in them, has been calculated by Lindanas at not less than two thousand eix bundred and forty-two square feet. Is it not wanderful to reflect that, in the course of a single year, one bundred thousand cubic feet of air have been drawn in and expelled, by something like nine million of separate and complicated actions of breathing, to arterialize more than three thousand and five hundred tone of blood?

We are constantly exhaling carbonic acid, but in variable quantities. Men exhale much more then women ; during the ages of from sixteen to berty the quantity exhaled by men nearly doubles that exhaled by women of the same ages. In men ft is observed that the amount gradually increases from the age of eight to that of thirty, making a andden start at the approach of paperty. From the age of thirty it decreases gradually, till at exfreme old age the am)unt is no greater than it was at ten. In women a noticeable phenomenen is observed ; the amount increases from infancy to puberity, just as in men; but at that epoch the increase suddenly ceases, and remains stationary till the shange of life, when the amount increases.

When we breathe over and over again the same air, it becomes slowly vitiated by the constant exand the vital functions are arrested.

and over again the same air will live in it for up besides he hasn't any of the other clothes that he Barks that were launched on the other side, wards of three hours; but at the close of the see- started out with."

"He who provideth our home shelter, He protecteth on the seas; When the wild winds seem to whisper, Let them tell thee things like these,"

Thus replied the shepherd father, And the child, with quiet mind, Had a thought of God's great mercies, As he listened to the wind.

ORIGIN OF VARIOUS PLANTS.

only are and what we have to do with them

Every gentlemen farmer ought to be somewhat acquainted with the origin and history of all ordinary plants and trees, so as to know their nature, country and condition. Such knowledge, besides being a great source of pleasure, and very desirable, will often enable him to explain the phenomena in the habits of many plants that other wise would appear inexplicable.

Wheat, although considered by some as a native of Sicily, originally came from the central table land of Thibet, where is yet exists as a grass, with small, mealy seeds. Rye exists wild in Siberia. Barley exists wild in the mountains of South Africa, whence it was taken to India, and call, we remain thence to Europe and America.

Pear are of unknown origin. Vesches are natives of Germany. The garden bean from the East Indias. Buckwheat came originally from Siberia and Torkey. Cabbage grows wild in Sieily and Naples. The poppy was brought from the East. The sunflower from Peru. Hops come to perfection as a wild flower in Germany. Saffron came from Egypt. The Onion is also a native of Egypt. A GENTS WANTED. Horse radioh from South Europe.

Tobacco is a native of Virginia, Tobage, and California. Another species has also been found wild in Asia.
